

Sustainable transport, yes. Silvertown tunnel, no

On-line discussion – Sunday 27 June, 5.0pm

Panel including Rebecca Lush (Transport Action Network); Simon Pirani (energy researcher, University of Durham); Izzet Hickmet (National Education Union / Labour for a Green New Deal); Sian Berry (London Assembly member and co-leader, Green party); Ruth Fitzharris (Mums for Lungs).

Plenty of time for you to make points and ask questions

To cut carbon emissions fast enough, and make London a better place to live, our city needs a sustainable transport policy based on public transport, plus support for cycling, walking and other zero-carbon modes. A good start would be to scrap the £2 billion+ Silvertown tunnel project, which will produce more car and HGV traffic. Let's work together for a zero-carbon transport system
